Operational Excellence at Work

APPLY NOW TO BERKELEY CATALYSTS

Berkeley Catalysts is a new one-year action-learning program that offers a unique professional development opportunity for 50 promising staff (one from each unit) to learn about campus issues while helping to solve them. Taking our Operating Principles as a jumping-off point, each Catalyst will partner with his/her unit leader to focus on a strategic opportunity or challenge for their unit. To do this, Catalysts will attend nine learning labs aimed at honing their leadership and organizational improvement skills, followed by three months of coaching and implementation.

Depending on your unit’s interests and time available, Catalysts might, for example, help unit meetings to run more effectively, increase employee engagement, make appreciation “go viral,” or streamline processes.

Applications are due September 20. For additional information—including the program guide (pictured right)—and to apply online, visit ucbcatalysts.berkeley.edu

Program and Project Updates

Transformation Support Services (TSS) has relaunched its website, http://tss.berkeley.edu, with a new Resources page that includes templates, checklists, workshop information, and other tools to help units accomplish their goals and realize the benefits of Operational Excellence projects. New resources and FAQ are now being posted weekly, so check back frequently!

The TSS team is composed of campus subject matter experts who offer tailored consulting services to schools, colleges, departments and administrative units in the major areas of organizational development: strategy, structure, people, and processes.

Advising Council Efforts Ramping Up

The Advising Council’s efforts to align campus advising are off to a strong start this fall. Bob Jacobsen, Associate Executive Dean for Advising in the College of Letters & Science, is working with the Advising Council and Learning + Organizational Development to pilot new training courses this academic year for the College’s advisors. The training is aimed at helping advisors provide undergraduates with a more high-touch, unified advising experience across their time at Berkeley, and to bring together advisors across silos.

In addition, the new Advising Council Fellows program launched, enabling a group of campus advisors to develop expertise in evaluating advising programs. The Council also launched a new website, advisingmatters.berkeley.edu, which features tools and resources for Berkeley’s advising community. In addition, the Advising Framework, a unified vision for Berkeley advising, is gaining visibility through a new poster campaign—a first step in integrating the Framework into operations.
